The Harvard and Yale University libraries provided stack passes, as did the Boston Athenaeum. The reference staffs of a number of Boston-area libraries assisted in locating copies of articles in scarce periodical files. Most other libraries we visited either had open-stack policies or made special arrangements to accommodate us.

Preliminary sections of the bibliography were circulated to most local historical societies in Connecticut by Freeman Meyer and the staff of the Connecticut Historical Society. A number of responses were received—most with suggestions for additional titles, a few to say that we had fully covered the historical writings about a particular community. In addition to the individuals and institutions mentioned above, I would like to thank the following: Lorraine McConnell, Ashford Historical Society; Jane Bonley, Branford Historical Society; Michael Gannett, Cornwall Historical Society; John Hetzel, Coventry Historical Society; Jeanne Field Spallone, Deep River Historical Society; Lauren Kaminsky, Historical Society of the Town of Greenwich; Mrs. David Noonan, Dorothy Whitfield Historical Society, Guilford; Irene Miller, Fairfield Historical Society; Laurel Best, Hall Memorial Library, Ellington; Thomas Lentz, Killingworth Historical Society; James Barnett, Mansfield Historical Society; Walter France, Morris Historical Society; Roger Jones, New Hartford Historical Society; Elizabeth Knox, New London County Historical Society; Ruth Hummel, Plainville Historical Society; Dorothy Robinson, Portland Historical Society; Elizabeth Livingston, Totoket Historical Society, North Branford; James Platt, Old Saybrook Historical Society; Alice Schneckenburger, Sherman Historical Society; and Carol Russell, Wilton Historical Society.

Two major bibliographies of Connecticut history have preceded this one in the past few years: those of Christopher and Bonnie Collier (entry 373) and Thomas Kemp (entry 484). As described by Christopher Collier in his foreword to this volume (see below), each has a purpose and focus distinct from that of the Bibliographies of New England History series. Both works were helpful in the preparation of this volume, especially in bringing to my attention some magazine and journal articles that were neither published in any of the numerous periodicals we systematically search for this series nor cited in standard bibliographical sources such as Writings on American History or America: History and Life. I also had access to a preliminary typescript list of Connecticut history titles that the Colliers compiled in the preparation of their work and to several unpublished lists of titles on particular subjects in Connecticut history. The latter were compiled as part of a project begun in the 1970s under the auspices of the Association for the Study of Connecticut History.

Christopher Bickford, Freeman Meyer, David Roth, and John Sutherland, members of the Editorial Board, provided helpful advice concerning collections to visit and periodicals to search. Other Connecticut members of the Committee for a New England Bibliography, who met as a group several times before and during the project, also offered suggestions.

Boston University's Academic Computing Center again provided valuable services to the project, and William Marshall, a member of that facility's staff, continued to work with us as a programmer and adviser on data management. Computerization of the series began with the Rhode Island bibliography (Volume 5), which was published in 1983. Mo Ying Li, Barbara Nachtigall, and Jennifer Phillips, graduate students in Boston University's American and New England Studies Program (AMNESP), served as research assistants at different stages of the project, checking some five thousand book and pamphlet entries against listings in the National Union Catalog and helping with the serials search. Gretchen Hensel, AMNESP administrative assistant, steered requests for supplies and payments through sometimes intricate channels.

Editorial Vice Chairman Edward James assisted in preliminary proofreading of sections of the bibliography, as did Floyd Shumway. Webb Dordick did the final proofreading, as he has throughout the series.

John Borden Armstrong, series editor and chairman of the Committee for a New England Bibliography since its inception in 1969, died unexpectedly on December 4, 1985, while we were making final preparations for the publication of this volume. The successful establishment of this project and its achievements to date were due to a very great extent to John's leadership and dedication. We will miss him as a colleague and friend. John had planned to write a historical sketch of the project for inclusion in the final two volumes of the series, which we plan to publish in 1989. Fortunately, he covered some of that ground in his preface to this volume, which represents his final thoughts on a project that meant much to him and of which he was a vital part.

December 1985 Roger Parks

Preface

With the publication of this sixth and final state volume, the Bibliographies of New England History series reaches an important milestone. The rationale and history of this lengthy and ambitious project, where it now stands, and what remains to be accomplished, should be of interest both to serious users of this bibliography and to a larger historical community. To the best of our knowledge, this is the first comprehensive historical bibliography of a major region of this country ever to be undertaken. The need for new syntheses of the vast historical output of the past century and for fresh research in many areas, combined with a growing recognition of the significance of regionalism in this country, suggests the importance of such a "first."

In the late 1960s, that period of social turmoil in the nation, scholarly and professional organizations convinced of the "relevance" of history pondered the problem of how to make the vast and growing body of historical writing on the New England region more accessible to researchers and the American public. One of these organizations, the New England Library Association, agreed to sponsor a weekend conference to discuss the feasibility of compiling a bibliography of New England history. In May 1969, in the propitious environs of Old Sturbridge Village, twenty historians and librarians well versed in New England history and its bibliographical problems met to consider the matter.

Despite the predictable differences of opinion, there emerged a general if hesitant consensus that such a bibliography could be very valuable for researchers, that a project of such magnitude, while beyond the capability of one individual or even one institution, might yield to a collective, cooperative approach, that there would be no better time to do it than during the nation's Bicentennial, and that the group would undertake the project. The Committee for a New England Bibliography was incorporated the next year as a non-profit, tax-exempt organization. Sixteen years later, a majority of those who attended the meeting at Old Sturbridge Village are still members of the committee, including the present writer, who has served as its chairman since it was formed, and the present editor.

Over the next three years, the committee met frequently to formulate plans for the project's organization, editorial procedures, and publishing arrangements, and strategies for finding financial and other support. Much effort went into the detailed formulation of editorial guidelines and policies. Recognizing that, while the scope of such a bibliography could be practically limitless, our resources would not be, we sought to design a bibliography that would be useful to a wide range of researchers, one that, although limited, would have a broad scope and a clear identity and would be comprehensive within its defined limits. The result was a decision to limit the bibliography to published works written as history or having an historical dimension or nature. We decided that, because this was a regional bibliography, it should have a geographical arrangement, with individual volumes for each state if possible, and a concluding volume for the region. Details of our guidelines are explained in the introduction to this volume. Some of them are admittedly arbitrary. Nonetheless, we hope the user will appreciate the wide net we have cast, and recognize that in such a bibliography there must be some tension between having clear guidelines and including as much useful material as possible.

Once the committee had passed the minefield of deciding on inclusions and exclusions, or thought we had, most of the remaining issues, at least in principle, were easier to resolve. The committee decided we would need a small professional staff working full time on the project if there was to be any hope of completing it in a reasonable length of time while maintaining both quality and uniformity of editorial standards. With the work underway for the first volume, the committee began to develop a structure and process meshing the roles of committee members with that of the editor and his assistants. In retrospect, it seems that this combination of a small, highly professional staff, aided and overseen by a committee of interested, informed volunteers, was an important key to the success the project has enjoyed. It has been an important operating principle that, in the final analysis, both the responsibility and credit for authorship of the series belongs to the committee as a whole.

From its first meeting, the committee recognized that, however real the scholarly need and however sound our plans for meeting that need, our success would depend upon the difficult process of finding financial support. Support was first sought from and provided by the libraries and historical and academic institutions of New England. When we had raised about ten thousand dollars, the committee turned to foundations, private enterprise, and individuals. Despite all our efforts, it was only the success of our first application to the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) that allowed us to search for and hire an editor. John D. Haskell, Jr., then a doctoral candidate at George Washington University, brought to the project the combination of historical and library training and personal qualities necessary for its success. With an editorial office and other benefits provided by Boston University, our first editor began his labors in November 1972.

With work underway, the question of how the bibliography was to be published became urgent. We were frequently told it would be very difficult if not impossible to get it published at all. Fortunately, the committee had members with sufficient expertise to determine the publication arrangements that would best serve its needs and interests. Our principal desiderata were that the series should be published as quality work, kept in print while there was a reasonable demand, and marketed effectively at prices within the reach of our intended audience. The committee also wanted to negotiate one contract for the whole series and to ensure prompt publication of all volumes in a similar format. Despite increasing pressures to get a publisher, and some disappointments, the committee held its ground and, in September 1974, signed a contract with G. K. Hall & Co. of Boston that incorporated all its desired provisions. In turn, the committee agreed to have the volumes produced photographically and to provide the publisher with camera-ready copy. Just a decade ago, this was a much less accepted means of publication than it has since become. For nearly eight years and the publication of four volumes, G. K. Hall & Co. remained our publisher.

Two years after signing a publication contract, to the immense relief of everyone concerned, the volumes began to appear in print: Massachusetts in 1976 with 13,520 entries; Maine in 1977 with 5,355 entries; New Hampshire in 1979 with 6,542 entries; Vermont in 1981 with 6,413 entries; Rhode Island in 1983 with 4,124 entries; and now Connecticut with 9,778 entries.

The committee has been fortunate in its editors for the series. Dr. Haskell left the project in the final stages of the compilation of the New Hampshire volume. The committee was grateful for his seven years of excellent editorial work, and particularly for the careful and exacting standards and procedures he established for the project. His successor, Dr. T. D. Seymour Bassett, had recently retired as curator of the Wilbur Collection of Vermontiana at the University of Vermont. A long established historian of New England, active in our project since its early days, his expert knowledge of Vermont history in particular made him a logical choice for editor of that state's bibliography. Upon completion of the Vermont volume, Dr. Bassett retired and the committee again made a national search for an editor. We were fortunate to find one with the qualifications of Dr. Roger Parks, then Director of the Library and of Research at Old Sturbridge Village. In particular, the project has benefited from his broad knowledge of New England and Connecticut history, his extensive research and editorial experience, and his adept ability to introduce and incorporate computerization midway in the project. That all three of our editors have brought to the project not only their own experience and skills but also great dedication is demonstrated by the fruits of their labors.

During the years in which these volumes were produced, the committee continued its efforts to formulate committee structures and functions suited to our goals and circumstances. At the outset we naively thought that the editor could handle most of our administrative work as well as his editorial duties. When that quickly proved unworkable, the chairman came to serve as the chief operating officer of the committee, and very substantial duties devolved upon other officers.

To provide careful oversight of the editorial work, the committee created an editorial board and an Editorial Vice Chairman. Membership on the board changes from one volume to the next so as to include those with expert knowledge of the state whose bibliography is currently being compiled. Dr. Edward T. James has served as Editorial Vice Chairman since 1976, and five volumes including the present one have benefited from his meticulous attention to detail and his high editorial standards. Dr. James and the editorial board assist the editor in the direction of his search and in interpreting and applying the committee's guidelines. From time to time changes shown to be clearly desirable have been made in the editorial procedures and the format of the volumes. To date none of these changes have been drastic. Any proposal that, in the judgment of the chairman, would represent a major change in procedures or guidelines is brought before the Board of Directors for approval. In this way we have sought to maintain a necessary flexibility in the face of changing circumstances while insuring against ill-considered or undesirable changes in the project.

In 1976, to deal more effectively with matters of recruitment of new members, promotion of the project and the series, and fund raising, the committee created the office of State Vice Chairman. This "federated" structure of leadership has been critical to having an effective committee. Particularly during the period when his or her own state bibliography is being prepared, the State Vice Chairman is one of the hardest working members of the committee. Our membership has increased over the years and now numbers about 110. Meetings of the full committee are held twice a year, in spring and fall, usually in the state whose volume is being prepared.

With this structure and an active, committed membership, the committee has been able to respond to challenges and seize opportunities to make a number of improvements in the workings of the project and in the volumes it publishes. Beginning with Roger Parks' editorship of the Rhode Island volume, we were able to do what had been judged impractical at the start of the project, that is, to utilize computerization. To one who has taken part in the preparation of all six of our volumes, this improvement seems close to magical. The editor, with the assistance of the Boston University Academic Computing Center, has developed programs for entering, editing, and printing his entries. He transfers his original entries from cards to a personal computer. These entries are then fed in batches into the University's computer, which arranges the entries, generates the index from headings entered along with the bibliographical data, and produces working-copy printouts as well as the final letter-quality, camera-ready copy for the publisher. Before the adoption of the computer, final typing of the text for the first volume in the series, that on Massachusetts, took our skilled typist nine months. The text for this Connecticut volume, which is somewhat smaller than the Massachusetts volume, will be produced by the computing center's laser printer in about fifteen minutes.

Closely connected with this improvement has been a change in administering the NEH grants in support of the project. After struggling with the necessary record keeping for nearly ten years, the committee in 1982 arranged to have its current and future grants administered by Boston University, where the Chairman and the editorial office have been located all along. The new arrangement ensures better record keeping and an improvement in the services and facilities available for the project, particularly the university's Academic Computing Center. Under the new arrangement, the committee remains responsible for the execution of the project and for raising the required matching funds. At Boston University, Dean Michael Mendillo of the Graduate School, Dr. David Berndt of the Office of Sponsored Programs, and Professors James Henretta and Keith Morgan, the former and current directors of the American and New England Studies Program, in particular, have assisted our project in many ways, for which we on the committee are duly grateful.

A third important change in recent years was a change of publisher. In 1983, the committee terminated its contract with G. K. Hall & Co. and signed a new agreement with the University Press of New England in order to ensure that all volumes would be kept in print until the completion of the series. Despite these changes, the guidelines, the standards, and the administrative and scholarly apparatus by which these bibliographies are being compiled and produced remain essentially the same.

Since 1976, when the Massachusetts bibliography was published, the committee has been encouraged and gratified by the favorable reception given its volumes. We have been pleased by the interest in the series shown outside of New England, testifying as it does to the national importance of the series. Our own research suggests that approximately three-fourths of all our published volumes held by research institutions are to be found outside New England. Confirmation of the success of our volumes has come in the form of renewed funding by NEH and, in 1982, an Award of Merit from the American Association for State and Local History. At the same time, the committee has endeavored to give serious attention to the criticism it has received and the suggestions for improvement that have been offered.

Underlying the steady progress of the project to this point has been the committee's continuing success in obtaining financial support. Since its initial funding NEH has made four consecutive grants, providing the principal support for the six volumes that have now been published. It is once again a pleasure for me to express here the committee's gratitude to the Endowment for its support, which has been crucial to the project, and our appreciation of the guidance and counsel provided by the Endowment's staff over the years.

The five grants received from NEH have all required that the committee raise a certain amount of matching funds. At present this comes to over fourteen thousand dollars a year. Securing these contributions has always been a major challenge to the committee. All members are expected to assist in our fund raising efforts, but the heaviest load falls upon the State Vice Chairman whose state bibliography is currently being compiled. For support of the volume in hand, Professor Freeman W. Meyer of the University of Connecticut has had responsibility. He has had valuable assistance from other Connecticut members of the committee, including Christopher Bickford of the Connecticut Historical Society and Floyd M. Shumway of the New Haven Colony Historical Society. For their efforts, and those of the other state vice chairmen, the committee is fortunate and grateful. Without them, there is little reason to suppose that the project would have progressed so far.

On the basis of estimated needs and possible support, the committee decided at the outset that a contribution of five hundred dollars or more would qualify the donor as a "sponsor" of the series. These sponsors now number over one hundred; except for those who wish to remain anonymous, they are listed herein. Some contributors have given much more than the amount stipulated for a sponsorship; others have given less. The total number of contributors now approaches five hundred. Large or small, all gifts have helped, and have served to demonstrate the local commitment to the project that is so important in securing support from major foundations.

In this regard, on behalf of the committee, I would like to express our sincere gratitude for the generous support provided for the present volume by the Hartford Foundation for Public Giving, the H. W. Wilson Foundation, and the Society of the Cincinnati of Connecticut.

As to the future, the committee's plans to complete this series are in keeping with the ambitious scale of the entire project. They have been spelled out in a lengthy application submitted to the NEH in June for our sixth and final grant. The goals and methods proposed are the product of intensive study and deliberate consideration by the committee for the past three years, and represent its collective wisdom on what the final dimensions of this series can and should be.

In a period of three years, including half a year under our current grant, the committee proposes to compile and publish two concluding New England volumes with a total of approximately twenty four thousand entries, or about one-third of the total entries in the series. Some of the features of these volumes we decided upon at the beginning of the project. Others, of more recent origin, are the committee's responses to criticisms and suggestions for improvement and to its own realization of the improving odds that we can complete our work.

According to our plan, the first of the two New England volumes will list published writings on the history of New England as a region, including works dealing with two or more states. Unlike the rest of our series, the entries in this volume will be topically arranged. As our editor has observed, this will be the first regional bibliography for this or any other part of the country. It will be particularly valuable because of the widely scattered and more fugitive nature of writings on New England as compared with writings on individual states.

We propose to include in this volume a lengthy historiographical essay written by an eminent historian. Building upon the historiographical essays in this and the preceding three volumes, the writer would assess the existing historical literature on New England and its states, its strengths and weaknesses, and the needs and opportunities for further study. Just as there has been no other comprehensive bibliography of the history of a major region of this country, neither has there been such an appraisal as we propose. The committee believes that such an essay would be one of the most important and widely useful products of this lengthy and expensive project, a resource of broad and enduring value in the field of American history.

The second New England volume will include, first of all, addenda—items that should have been included in the first six volumes but were missed. For this purpose, the committee has already appointed state editors, who are conducting reviews of the volumes on their respective states. The second New England volume will also include entries for works published since the cut-off date for each of the state bibliographies. It will thus update the entire series to a uniform cut-off date, probably 1987. The number of update entries will be substantial, especially for the earlier volumes in the series, running to at least several thousand. This final volume will also contain an editorial essay explaining the history of our editorial practices and policies as they have evolved over two decades. To assist researchers, it will include a list of all journals or serials systematically searched in compiling the series, a useful list that will run to several hundred titles.

Both of these New England volumes will also include another category of materials. Dissertations and theses were originally excluded from the series on the grounds that we were including only published history. That was a difficult decision, however, and doubts remained. By 1979, many dissertations were available in sufficient numbers or as publications produced on demand to justify the inclusion of these writings in a bibliography of published works. Rather than beginning at that point to include dissertations in the remaining state volumes, the committee decided to reserve them all for a concluding New England volume. These dissertations, which will add at least several thousand titles to the two New England volumes, will be a valuable addition. Dissertations, and even master's theses, often represent the only significant and high-quality work that has been done on a given subject.

Just how the committee and its editor expect to produce two such substantial and complex volumes in three years may well be a cause of wonder. It is not necessary to explain the details of the editorial process here, but a detailed plan has been developed that will make the most of the committee's resources: the skills and interest of its members, the editorial procedures developed over the years, our computer facilities, the resources of Boston University's American and New England Studies Program, and not least the experience, skills, and dedication of our editor.

The publication of the New England volumes will round out twenty years' effort to bring this series into existence. We estimate the total direct cost of the project will be about $850,000. The indirect cost, including the incalculable volunteer contributions of time and work by members of the Committee for a New England Bibliography, and Boston University's cost sharing of overhead expenses, might equal or exceed the direct cost. For that investment, the nation will have a comprehensive, eight-volume guide to the rich historical literature on New England, one listing an estimated seventy thousand writings and containing much related information helpful to researchers.

Assuming that we will have the financial support to complete the series, the committee will face additional tasks in the next three years. In a previous volume, I opined that twenty years was about as long as any committee ought to spend on any bibliography. Nonetheless, as we approach the completion of this series, decisions will have to be made about the future of the committee and its work. We have also been asked to provide for future updatings of the series. Our editor calculates that titles meeting our guidelines may continue to appear at the rate of several hundred a year, so this question has a certain cogency. There is also, we perceive, a growing awareness of the significance of this series for regional studies in general, and a scholarly conference on its import is already in view. Nonetheless, one must deal with concerns of the present and future in the proper order. The immediate question concerns the assurance of financial support for the editorial work to implement our work plan and complete the Bibliographies of New England History series.

In previous volumes in this series, going back to its beginning, I have sought to point out to its users the larger methodological significance of this project. This series may serve as an instructive example of how, even in times of social disorder or economic distress, scholarly projects of merit can be accomplished by the voluntary, cooperative efforts of individuals and institutions. In view of the publication of this final state bibliography and the prospect of successfully completing the Bibliographies of New England History series in the next few years, we hope other areas of the country with similar historical and bibliographic concerns may be encouraged by our experience to undertake similar projects. They should be able to better our time.

Foreword

Woodrow Wilson, a professor of political science at a New Jersey college, wrote in 1895 that "the history of a nation is only the history of its villages." This undoubtedly was more nearly true in 1895 than in 1985, if indeed it is true at all any longer. But it was true once, probably for the first three centuries of this nation's history. What can be said of the United States in this respect is even more applicable to its states. Surely no one could write a history of Connecticut without an intimate knowledge of at least some of her towns individually and a general understanding of all of them.

Yet as Allan Nevins, a journalist turned historian, pointed out, local history to be useful must present universal ideas. Local history can do this best—perhaps better than any other genre—by getting close to the people of its particular communities. To write of the particular and speak to the universal should be the ideal of the local historian. "Local history written for a local audience," wrote Nevins, "is bad history; local history written for a national or international audience is good history."[1]

Nevins perhaps overstates his point. A lot of local audiences are deserving of local history written just for them—especially when, as is usually the case, they pay for it. But it is also true that local history that illuminates universal truths is more valuable than universal history that reveals only the minutiae of life. Thus it was once remarked about the intellectual development of the great nineteenth-century historical popularizer John Fiske: "He began with the history of the Universe; he went on to the history of the United States; and he may yet advance to the history of Cambridge."[2]

[2] Ibid., 124

It can be said, then, that although local audiences may demand histories that chronicle the minutiae of the ancestors who inhabited their ancient home towns, they deserve better works than they demand. If they call for bread only, bake them a cake anyway.

Local histories that sort out the universal from the unique will provide the fullest insight and greatest understanding and thus the highest appreciation from their local sponsors. But both aspects must be thoroughly explored and illustrated. What characteristics of this town are found in almost all Connecticut communities? American communities? World communities? Can a minute examination of an institution—a church, a school, a local fraternal society—put readers in touch with the people there in a way that conveys a ubiquitous personality, a set of relationships, or a human ideal? What does the Connecticut community, or the people who live in it, tell us about the human condition in New Jersey, Colorado, Germany, India, or Korea?

Local histories written with universals in mind, if successful, win prizes from professional historians—and indeed they are usually written by professional historians. But they are seldom what the local historical society has promoted and paid for. If we are to develop a literature of local history written by academically trained historians, these historians must learn to look both ways, inward and outward. They must ask not only what universals are illuminated in this community, but also what makes it different. Each community is a collection of characteristics that is unique. No two towns combine in exactly the same way geography, archaeology, institutional and human history, and current profile. The local resident will want to know what makes his town different from its neighbors down the highway. What special set of circumstances or tendencies color the community's personality? What contemporary distinguishing institution or characteristic makes it different to live here rather than there?

Good local histories—that is, histories that illuminate the human condition by showing that at core human beings behave in the same way regardless of time or place, and that at the same time show that history is made up of a congeries of unique episodes that gives every moment and every place a character like no other in the world—local histories that do this cannot be left to amateurs. They must be written, or at least supervised, by trained professionals.

There is another reason why local histories need the guiding hand of the professional. To make sense out of a community's past a researcher needs to know about the past of scores of other communities, both similar and different. The student must know the questions that other professionals have asked and must understand the answers that have been offered. That is, a writer of local history must have a full grasp of the historiographic dimension of the topic. Only then can the writer measure one community against another, sorting out the unique from the universal and illuminating each with examples drawn from the microcosm under study.

It is at this point that the academic historian needs the local amateur: the antiquarian, the genealogist, the chronicler, the keeper of old records. The great value of local history to the world beyond the subject community is that studies of little villages lend themselves to minute examination of all their parts; that is, communities can be atomized—reduced to their smallest elements, separate, individual, little human beings. People, individually and in groups, are the center of historical studies. No one knows the people better than the people themselves. When it gets right down to why one person rather than another became the town leader, or why this church failed and that one prospered, then the historian has to ask the genealogist, who was related to whom and how? He has to ask the keeper of records, who lived where, what did they do for a living and how wealthy were they? He has to ask the collector of photographs and hoarder of diaries, why did these people hate those people and why were these personal loyalties stronger than those principles?

One has only to look at the source citations in Bruce Daniels' The Connecticut Town to see how essential to scholarly research are the hundreds of volumes of local history written by antiquarians, which Daniels calls "the most valuable secondary sources . . . invariably useful in some way."[3] Richard Bushman also admits his dependence on town and county histories, in which "a patient page-by-page study will reveal a vast collection of information that can be shaped to the reader's own categories of significance."[4] John Waters' scholarly study of social mobility in Guilford includes among its sources nine published genealogies.[5] Note how universal is the use by modern social historians of Charles W. Manwaring's digest of early probate records, compiled in the early years of the twentieth century. And how familiar to the scholar are the phrases "the chart—or graph or table—above has been compiled from local histories too numerous to be listed separately"?

Thus the genealogist, the one-dimensional chronicler, the society clerk, the paster-up of scrapbooks, the journalist, and the diarist must be encouraged to go on their plodding or merry way. They do these things because they think they ought to or because they have fun doing them. Historians have demonstrated their appreciation of antiquarian works by the way they use them. And the antiquarians must learn, too; they will find deeper meaning and greater satisfaction from their research when they know how it fits in with everyone else's work. They need not try to become professional historians—for then they might not provide the kinds of materials they do—but they ought at least to understand what it is that historians do.

This bibliography, then, is for everybody—professional and amateur—who in any way works or plays at doing local history. It includes works by scholars and laymen, journalists and antiquarians, specialists in architecture, engineering, business, and other professions. The best of this kind of work illuminates the past in a way that clarifies the present; the worst of it is junk that was useless—even foolish—as it fell from the pen of its author. In most cases, however, the people who wrote the work had fun in the process, and we can assume that the people who took the trouble to read it either had a good time doing it or learned something useful or maybe even both.

Roger Parks' research has brought to light so many little known works—some virtually unknown—that we can now see that certain areas of Connecticut history have been well, if not exhaustively, written about. Religion during the colonial era strikes one as a subject that has attracted some of the best scholarship, not only in recent years but throughout the twentieth century. Histories of towns abound, though of widely varied quality, and the field should be surveyed before new ones are undertaken. It is probably safe to say that amateurs have had a field day there, and it is perhaps time for professionals to become more involved in helping out on the local scene. There is a vast literature of company histories and biographies and autobiographies of industrialists waiting for the generalizer to use it as grist for a comprehensive history of Connecticut industry.

But despite the vast number of books and articles that Parks has located and listed, there are still a lot of gaps in the literature of Connecticut history. To begin with, the period since about 1800 is greatly under-represented, and indeed the closer to the present we get the thinner is the literature, especially the serious scholarly work. When we consider that modern Connecticut is at least as much the product of the nineteenth-century triad of industrialization, urbanization, and immigration as it is of the much-written-about colonial era, it is especially surprising and lamentable that so little of worth has been published about these phenomena and that age. Both the "old social history"—descriptions of education, race, the family, etc.—and the "new social history"—analyses of social mobility, demographics, the inarticulate, women, sex, the family, etc.—are virtually nonexistent outside the dissertation literature. For the period since 1818—except for half a dozen unpublished dissertations—there are almost no studies of politics and its relation to immigration, urbanization, and suburbanization, especially in the twentieth century. Such fundamental concerns as automobile transportation and highway development have been neglected; and certainly some attention to Connecticut's aircraft industry is long overdue. The student interested in the economic history of the past one hundred fifty years has to depend largely on government reports, business histories, biographies, and newspapers; in other words, he must go to primary sources, since the secondary materials are so thin or so out-of-date.

The field perhaps most neglected—and most surprisingly so—is biography. Biography deals with what people are interested in most: people. It is fun to write and usually fun to read. Yet scores of major Connecticut figures remain without biographies, or with only sketchy or unrevealing ones. Though many Connecticut governors were not significant forces, almost none of them are the subject of good published biographies—not even such major ones as Raymond Baldwin, Chester Bowles, William Buckley, Wilbur Cross, Abraham Ribicoff, John Cotton Smith, Oliver Wolcott, Jr., or even either of the Roger Wolcotts. Other politicians as important as Frank Brandegee, Gershom Bulkley, Homer Cummings, Gideon Granger, Ephraim Kirby, Jasper McLevy, and Henry Roraback go unheralded. Distinguished jurists such as David Daggett, Thomas Day, John Hooker, Dwight Loomis, William Maltbie, Patrick O'Sullivan, Tapping Reeve, and Zephaniah Swift also lack biographies. Even such central early founders as John Davenport, Theophilus Eaton, Roger Ludlow, Robert Treat, and John Wyllys are without full-scale, solid treatments. Historians and literary figures such as Benjamin Trumbull, Gideon Hollister, Frances Caulkins, Florence Crofut, Ellen Larned, Charles Dudley Warner, and Charles Hoadley, and industrialists and businessmen such as Isaac Bronson, David Humphreys, Chauncey Jerome, George Dudley Seymour, Eli Terry, and Jeremiah Wadsworth, all remain with no interpreters outside of the dissertation literature. Others, such as reformer Reverend Leonard Bacon, first black minister James Pennington, largest slaveholder Godfrey Malbone, educator Lewis Sprague Mills, coach Walter Camp, and scores of other figures whose lives would shed light on the development of Connecticut society, lie waiting for the curious and enterprising interpreter of the state's past.

In summary, despite the vast body of great and terrible work on Connecticut history that has seen print over the past three hundred years or so, much still remains to be done. And since every generation must look at the past through its own eyes, the process of understanding contemporary Connecticut by studying its past is perpetual.

One way to appraise Roger Parks' Connecticut bibliography is to take a look at those that preceded it. They are limited in number and, to a greater or lesser degree, in scope.

An early venture, published in 1900, was Charles A. Flagg's "Reference Works on Connecticut Local History." His list of 23 general works, 6 genealogical works, and 575 items organized by county and town is virtually unknown, not widely available, and scarcely used at all. Internal evidence leads one to believe that it was not even consulted when Sophie A. Frankel published her list of Connecticut Town Histories in 1944. Flagg's work was far from comprehensive, he explains, because his purpose was "to show briefly and clearly the resources of the New York state library in Connecticut local history."

Perhaps stung by the fact that the New York librarian would sponsor such a volume before Connecticut made the effort, George S. Godard, Connecticut State Librarian and sometime president of the American Library Association, attempted to spur the Connecticut Library Association on to the work. From 1904 to 1907 Godard tried to ride herd on a committee established to do the job, but finally gave up with nothing to show for his labors but frustration. For nearly three quarters of a century there was little change. A survey in 1972 by a Yale reference librarian revealed that comprehensive bibliographies of forty-nine of the United States had been published, most of them of relatively recent date. Incredibly, the one exception was Connecticut, one of the oldest and in many ways one of the most influential of all the fifty.

In 1974 the State Department of Education revised its earlier publication of Rheta A. Clark's Connecticut Yesterday and Today: A Selected Bibliography for Connecticut Schools (1955 and 1961). The 1974 revision, by Clark, David M. Roth, and Arthur E. Soderlind, is especially useful in indicating materials appropriate for younger readers. United States Local Histories in the Library of Congress, edited by Marion J. Kaminkow, is a massive four-volume work. Volume I, pages 627–720, the Connecticut section, lists more than 1,300 items, organized under such headings as "Directories," "Gazetteers," "Antiquities," and "Guidebooks." The bulk of it, however, is organized by counties and towns. Of even greater help is the New York Public Library's Dictionary Catalog of the Local History and Genealogy Division, an eighteen-volume work covering the collection to 1971. There are 300,000 cards reproduced in this set, hundreds under Connecticut and under cities, towns, and other places in the state. Both of these works are out of date now, however, and neither was comprehensive to begin with.

Without a comprehensive bibliography, Connecticut studies was left with a gap large enough to shove the state library building through. Amazingly, in view of the long history of apathy and neglect, three major Connecticut bibliographies have been published within the last four years: Thomas Kemp's Connecticut Researcher's Handbook (1981), Christopher and Bonnie Collier's The Literature of Connecticut History (1983), and now Roger Parks' monumental compilation.

Kemp, a Stamford librarian of impeccable credentials, is as much a genealogist as he is a local historian, and his work reflects that interest. Connecticut Researcher's Handbook was published as Volume 12 in Gale Research Company's Genealogy and Local History Series. Kemp reports that he included "the name, address, and telephone number of every cemetery, genealogical society, historical society, library, newspaper, probate court, and town clerk in the state" as of 1980. An opening section of about eighty-seven pages lists statewide records of adoption, divorce, naturalization, and censuses, with church histories, vital statistics, and other materials of interest to the genealogist. The next 664 pages are organized first by county and then by town. Under each town heading researchers will find not only the addresses of local cemeteries, history-related institutions, and the repositories of vital statistics, land, tax, and military records, but also a list of local histories.

At first glance one might assume that Parks' local history coverage largely duplicates that of Kemp, but a comparison shows them to be radically different. Groton can serve to represent a typical entry in both works. Kemp lists thirty-nine cemeteries with locations or addresses and gives citations to Charles Hale's unpublished fifty-nine-volume transcriptions of the tombstones in Connecticut's 2,000 cemeteries as of around 1938. (The Hale work is located at the State Library.) He lists five articles about Groton cemeteries and seven sets of church records, with their locations if unpublished. He notes the inclusive dates of the existing land records, provides the address of the probate court and inclusive dates of probate records with their location (mostly at the State Library), and gives the dates and location of tax and vital records, and the addresses of the historical society, town clerk, libraries, and newspapers. He also lists military records and accounts of the Battle of Groton Heights. He concludes with a listing of published local histories and other miscellaneous records such as those of the justices of the peace. Altogether, Kemp lists five local histories, two of which are accounts of the Battle of Groton Heights.

Parks lists no addresses and provides no information about manuscript records. But under Groton we find sixty-eight items. He duplicates one cemetery description listed by Kemp but omits the other four. Kemp lists one local history omitted by Parks. Parks' Groton listings break down like this: twelve general historical sketches; seventeen accounts of the Battle of Groton Heights (1781); twenty articles about particular topics; nine church histories; and one cemetery description. Clearly, each of these works serves its intended audience: genealogists should turn first to Kemp, local historians to Parks.

Though compiled without reference to each other—indeed virtually unknown to each other until the very late stages of production—Kemp's and the Colliers' bibliographies could hardly be more different, yet more suitably complementary. The Collier work is designed for students, scholars, and teachers who are researching eras or topics in the state's history. There is no categorization by places or regions, towns or counties. Indeed, the Colliers explicitly state that their work "is not a comprehensive bibliography of Connecticut. It is, rather, a set of short essays on, lists of, and annotations for works dealing with the state's history compiled in an effort to provide students and teachers with a quick and easy survey of the published literature. We have attempted to be comprehensive within those areas we think most useful to the general student of Connecticut history; certain other areas have been omitted. The principal area intentionally omitted from this bibliography is town history."

Obviously the Colliers and Kemp have aimed at different audiences and written quite different books. And just as clearly the Colliers' and Parks' works will serve very different purposes. What does The Literature of Connecticut History have that Parks does not? No one has ever counted, but the Collier work includes somewhere between four thousand and five thousand titles. Some of these, though not many, are not Connecticut-focused, but are included in general discussions about Connecticut topics. For example, Architecture, Ambition and Americans: A Social History of American Architecture, by Wayne Andrews, is mentioned in a section introducing the works available for a study of Connecticut architecture.

The Colliers have written essays varying in length from less than one hundred words to over two thousand words to introduce readers to each topic for which the relevant literature is listed. These essays attempt to provide a context for the bibliographic listings and to explain the questions raised and interpretations developed by professional historians. The entries are usually accompanied by short annotations ranging in length from one word to short essays of half a dozen sentences. Of the three recent bibliographies, only the Colliers' includes doctoral dissertations.

But even Kemp's Researcher's Handbook and the Colliers' Literature of Connecticut History do not add up to the whole picture. The only one of the three works that aims at real comprehensiveness is Roger Parks' Bibliography of Connecticut History. Parks' magnificent bibliography draws from both of the two earlier works and, even apart from its inclusion of recent items published as late as 1985, is vastly more comprehensive than either of them. It is intended for everyone interested in Connecticut history. The fourth grader writing a report on "Indian Games and Sports," the railroad hobbyist interested in the Shepaug Valley Tunnel, the folklorist following clues about Captain Kidd's hidden treasures, the journalist writing a piece on suburban spread into the tobacco fields, and the doctoral student writing a dissertation on kinship relations and the political structure in colonial towns will all turn to Parks' bibliography as a work of first reference. But most of all, it is the local historian who will find the work an indispensable and constant guide. From this moment on, the undying cry, the most often repeated sign of gratitude from every writer of town histories, will be, "What did we do before Parks?"

Roger Parks surveyed the catalogs at all the major and most of the minor libraries in Connecticut to ferret out some ninety-eight hundred items found in his bibliography. Everything in print is here—good, bad, memorable, ephemeral, juvenile, scholarly, establishment, and fugitive. Parks' discipline is masterful; he has allowed himself no potshots at junk or praise for friends' work. He limits his commentary to occasional brief phrases intended only to clarify the content of a work whose title is not descriptive. Most of his entries just hang there waiting to be plucked and appraised, employed or cast aside, strictly according to the researcher's own needs and judgments. In other words, Parks has performed the most grueling bibliographic labor—to change the metaphor—in the salt mines of history and has delivered us the rawest of raw materials. But these materials will save the local historian days of dreary effort and provide the assurance of a comprehensiveness that only a professional can develop.

Introduction

The Connecticut volume, like its predecessors in the Bibliographies of New England History series, lists published writings—books, pamphlets, magazine and journal articles—about the history of a particular New England state, its cities, towns, and counties, its people and their institutions. This is a comprehensive rather than a selective bibliography. Within the editorial guidelines of the Committee for a New England Bibliography (CNEB), it includes all titles uncovered in a systematic search of state and local history collections and numerous periodicals files. Full-time work on this volume began in the summer of 1983 and extended to the fall of 1985. Our cutoff date for comprehensive coverage is the end of 1984, but we have added as many 1985 titles as possible—some fifty in all—before going to press. Chronologically, then, the listings in this volume represent the period from earliest settlement to nearly the present time.

The various works cited here were written by academic scholars, professional writers, and amateur historians. Foreign language publications are listed, as well as materials written in English. Some of the subjects dealt with are of broad, current interest to students, scholars, or general readers; others are of more local concern or reflect the interests of earlier generations of Connecticut historians and their readers.

In bringing these materials together, we make no qualitative judgment. Our purpose is to identify and make accessible the many scattered references and to suggest the kinds of information that can be extracted from them through careful use of this bibliography and its index of authors, subjects, and places. Our listings provide uniform bibliographical data—name of author, full title of the work, place and date of publication, and pagination—plus one or two library locations for each book and pamphlet entry. Brief annotations are included where needed to clarify the subject or scope of a particular work.

This is the sixth in what is now projected as an eight-volume series of bibliographies of New England history. With the publication of the present work, each of the region's six states now has a recent, comprehensive bibliography, compiled under a set of editorial guidelines established by the CNEB in its early years and refined through experience with the Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Rhode Island volumes. In the remainder of the series we will consider the history of New England as a region and will also augment the six state bibliographies, furnishing additions, corrections, and updates to the original volumes.

Under the guidelines for the series, published writings, to be included here, must have been produced as works of history or else include a significant historical dimension. They must have been written at least one year after the events they describe, and they must deal mainly with events within the state. Accounts of the 1938 hurricane that appeared soon after the fact are thus excluded from this volume, as are combat histories of Connecticut units in conflicts such as the Civil War and World War I. Certain types of materials, with exceptions to be described below, are also excluded as a class: almanacs, directories, and guidebooks; government documents; historical articles published in newspapers; genealogies; maps and atlases; works of fiction; juvenile literature; and, originally, biographies and autobiographies.

"The exclusions, however," as former editor T. D. Seymour Bassett explained in his introduction to an earlier bibliography in the series, "are not absolute. We try to go beyond the form and determine the substance." Each volume thus includes both collected biographies and a substantial number of individual biographies and autobiographies that in our opinion contain significant material about some aspect of state or local history. Although we exclude straight, tabular genealogies, we include family histories.

While our general policy is to be comprehensive within these defined limits, there are a few categories in which we do not make a systematic search but nevertheless include items that have come to the attention of the editor. The most notable example is that of newspaper articles. Thus, although we do not search the many newspaper files that might contain an occasional historical article, we do list a certain number of such articles—especially articles in a series—that have come to light in our library search.

We also list relevant bibliographies. Those for Connecticut that deal with subject matter within our editorial guidelines are included in the body of the work. Others appear in the Connecticut section of the Supplementary Bibliographies and Guides, which immediately precedes the index.

To assure proper verification and uniform indexing of entries, the editor personally examines virtually every title. He conducts his search in New England libraries, also using the Library of Congress shelflist for the state in question. In compiling the Connecticut volume, the strategy was to begin with four major research collections in the state, those of the Connecticut Historical Society and Connecticut State Library in Hartford and of the New Haven Colony Historical Society and Yale University in New Haven. From there the search extended outward to other public libraries, academic libraries, and special collections in Connecticut and to important collections elsewhere in New England. We were able to search the local history holdings of at least one public library in nearly all of Connecticut's 169 cities and towns. This widespread local search, like a similar one in Rhode Island, turned up a number of titles that had not been found in the major collections. Still, the majority of books and pamphlets cited here are available in one or more of the Hartford and New Haven institutions in which the search began.

Substantial state and local history collections were found in the public libraries of a number of Connecticut communities, particularly Bridgeport, Danbury, Fairfield, Farmington, Greenwich, Hartford, Middletown, New Britain, New London, Norwich, Stamford, and Waterbury. Noteworthy college and university collections, in addition to Yale's, included those of Connecticut College, New London; Trinity College, Hartford; the U.S. Coast Guard Academy, New London; the University of Connecticut, Storrs; and Wesleyan University, Middletown. Other important in-state collections visited during the search were those of the Danbury Scott-Fanton Museum, Danbury; Mystic Seaport, Mystic; the Norwalk Historical Reference Library; and the historical societies of Darien, Fairfield, Greenwich, Litchfield, New Canaan, Stratford, and Wethersfield.

Some additional titles were recorded in other New England libraries: the American Antiquarian Society in Worcester, Mass.; the Boston Public Library and Massachusetts State Library in Boston; and the Harvard University libraries in Cambridge, Mass. As noted in the Acknowledgments, a number of Boston-area libraries also proved to be rich repositories of many of the serials files that were searched for articles about Connecticut history—especially the national magazines and journals. In addition to the institutions already mentioned, these included the Boston Athenaeum, Boston College, Boston University, Brandeis University, the Congregational Library, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, New England Historic and Genealogical Society, Tufts University, and Wellesley College. The Clark University library in Worcester was another useful source of serials titles, as were the major Hartford and New Haven institutions, the University of Connecticut, and several other Connecticut collections visited during the search. Indeed, copies of most of the articles cited in this volume can undoubtedly be found in Connecticut repositories. Since our project is based in Boston, it made good sense to concentrate as much of the serials search there as possible. For books and pamphlets, however, our experience throughout the series has been that the best collections by far for a particular state are in the state itself.

Most libraries granted us stack privileges. This made it possible to conduct the book and pamphlet search volume-by-volume and shelf-by-shelf, examining each item before recording the bibliographical data and assigning index headings. Extensive use also was made of the card catalogs in most institutions.

The percentage of magazine and journal articles is slightly smaller in this volume than in previous bibliographies in the series. Even so, articles account for approximately half of the total number of entries here. At the beginning of the Bibliographies of New England History project, a core list of national, regional, and state periodicals was searched thoroughly for titles pertaining to New England and each of its states. Titles were briefly noted at that time. Since then, as each state volume has been researched in turn, the core list has been updated and the briefly noted articles pertaining to the state in question have been found and carefully examined before being cited. For this volume, a number of Connecticut periodicals also were searched. These included the publications of various historical societies, colleges and schools, professional societies, and trade organizations. Several Connecticut periodicals of a more general nature were also searched. Among them were the Connecticut Quarterly and its successor, Connecticut Magazine, which were published around the turn of this century and for a time specialized in articles about the state's history; Connecticut Circle and its present-day successor, Connecticut; and The Lure of the Litchfield Hills. The last-named magazine published a great many historical articles pertaining to the history of towns in northwestern Connecticut. It began publication in 1929 and survived until the 1970s. Additional articles were found as a result of systematically searching the listings in such sources as America: History and Life, the American Historical Association's Writings on American History, and a number of the Connecticut bibliographies cited in this volume. In listing articles, we have used abbreviations or initials for the titles of periodicals frequently cited; full titles are provided in the list of Serial Abbreviations.

As in the earlier volumes in the series, entries are organized geographically, with separate sections for state, county, and local listings. Works pertaining to more than one town appear under the appropriate county; those relating to more than one county are included in the state section. The "see also" references at the end of many county, city, and town listings are a guide to these boundary-spanning materials.

Under each geographical heading, entries are arranged alphabetically. Works by the same author are listed in alphabetical order by title, followed by any titles by that author and a collaborator. A dash at the beginning of an entry means that the work was written by the author of the preceding entry. Where an author's name has been determined from information other than the title page, it is enclosed in brackets.

Author and corporate-author entries have been preferred in most cases. Edited and compiled works are given a title entry, however, unless it is clear from the text that a "compiler" should in fact be regarded as an author. Otherwise, the editor's or compiler's name follows the title.

Titles or imprints, when not shown on the title page or verso, appear in brackets. Where there is more than one edition, the most recent or the best one is cited, and the date of the first edition, if known, appears in parentheses after the title. Pagination indicates the last numbered page; substantial unnumbered pages are shown in brackets.

The index lists authors, editors, and compilers and also provides access to scores of different subjects. As in previous volumes, we also have identified a number of place names in the index, whether or not those places are subjects of works cited in the bibliography.

In this volume, we provide one or two library locations for each book and pamphlet entry. We cite a Hartford and/or New Haven location where available, giving other Connecticut or New England locations only for materials we were unable to find in the major libraries of either of those cities. Listings for Hartford libraries reflect the order of search, which began at the Connecticut Historical Society and proceeded to the Connecticut State Library, Trinity College, and the Hartford Public Library. In New Haven we searched the holdings of the New Haven Colony Historical Society first, followed by those of Yale University and the New Haven Free Public Library. Library locations are indicated by standard library symbols. For a list of those used in this volume, see Location Symbols.

Prior to the publication of the Rhode Island volume in 1983, we provided locations only for books and pamphlets not listed in any of the various editions of the National Union Catalog (NUC). That series, however, is not readily accessible to some of our readers; it has become increasingly cumbersome to search; and it sometimes fails to list a location that most of our readers would find useful. We continue to check our book and pamphlet titles against the NUC's listings, however, and provide a plus sign (+) to identify titles found in the NUC. Readers who wish to consult that source for other possible locations may find the effort rewarding. Readers outside of Connecticut may also wish to refer to the published lists of the local history holdings of such institutions as Harvard University, the Library of Congress, and the New York Public Library. Those lists are cited under Supplementary Bibliographies and Guides.

In searching for magazine and journal articles listed here, readers should also be familiar with the Union List of Serials. That work lists a number of libraries that own runs of a particular periodical. Similar union lists are available for many states and for other political and geographical units.

The final two volumes planned for our series, as already noted, will include not only publications on New England as a whole but also additions to the six state volumes. For Connecticut, we will list titles that were overlooked in compiling this work, together with items published since the completion of our search and a full listing of doctoral dissertations pertaining to state and local history. We have not cited dissertations in this series to date, although several bibliographies of theses and dissertations relating to Connecticut history are listed in this volume—particularly the one recently compiled by Christopher Collier (entry 372). To assist the editor in correcting and updating the state volumes, state editors were appointed for each of the other states in 1985, and one will be appointed for Connecticut in 1986, following the publication of this work. Their job is to coordinate a review of their state's volume and to furnish the editor with recommendations for additional entries that meet the CNEB's editorial guidelines. Readers are invited to assist us in the review process. Suggestions for additions, corrections, and updates to this volume may be addressed to the state editor for Connecticut, after his or her name has been announced; or to Editor, Committee for a New England Bibliography, 226 Bay State Road, Boston, MA 02215.

Supplementary Bibliographies and Guides

Bibliographies of categories of material covered by our editorial guidelines are included in the main body of this volume. They are listed in the Index under the heading "Bibliographies" and also under the particular subject headings to which they pertain, where they come first, separated by a semicolon from other entries. Selected Connecticut materials wholly or partially excluded by our guidelines can be found in the bibliographies and guides listed below. The list is divided into two sections, [1] General and New England (the items listed here provide geographical access to particular states) and [2] Connecticut. Index

This index includes all authors, editors, and compilers, as well as subjects and places. The references are to entry numbers, not pages. If there is a bibliography for a particular heading, it is listed first and is separated from the other entry numbers by a semicolon. To find general works of state history, see "Connecticut--histories." We distinguish persons with identical names by vital dates or other data.

We alphabetize word by word rather than letter by letter (East Windsor before Eastford). Corporate authors divided by a period (such as Connecticut. Tercenterary Commission) precede names of institutions not so divided (such as Connecticut Historical Society).

Included in the index are the names of a number of present and former localities within towns. Many of these places are the subjects of historical writings cited in the bibliography; others are not, and their names have been provided for reference purposes. The best source of information about the state's minor localities is Connecticut place names, Huges and Allen, comps. (entry 481). Where a work is about several towns, each town is indexed; but sections on towns in county or state histories or other works of larger scope are not indexed.

Library of Congress subject headings have usually been preferred. The user can find material about one subject in one place (e.g., German Americans in Vernon) by first finding the range of entry numbers for that place, and then looking for numbers under the subject heading that fall within that range. Headings with many entries, such as "Churches, Congregational," have usually been subdivided by towns.
